Each process can have only one user mode or kernel mode. Hiding processes You can use the Task Manager to hide processes. The Task Manager gives you better visibility into the resources used by the process. You can hide it when you are not working on that particular process. Right-click the desired process, and select Task Manager. Then press the End task button. You can un-hide the process from the task manager by right-clicking it and selecting End Task again. Note that you can also launch the task manager as a separate program. When you start a program, you might
