Need For Speed The Run Reloaded CrackQ: RabbitMQ: Unit test a processing layer with message queue My project has two layers: Application layer (Sends msg to broker, receive/process msg, log msgs, return messages to client, etc) Broker (MQ) How can I test that in ApplicationLayer, if I send and receive a message, the right message is being put in the right queue, processed, returned to the client? (non mocha qunit style) A: In the application layer you can inject mocked/stubbed services/classes. For example you can implement an interface that will contain all the methods that need to be tested. Then create a mock of this interface, inject it into the application class and you can then use a setter method to mock the connection. How can i mock a rabbitMQ client without spypi? If your application has some classes that interact with a RabbitMQ client, then you should be able to mock this with your mock interface and then inject it into your application. Q: #1046 - No database selected when mysql_select_db I'm currently working on a site for a friend, but am having trouble with the database connection. I get the error " #1046 - No database selected" when calling mysql_select_db('New-2'). I'm certain that the connection string
